

Response to Reviewer

Response to Reviewer

Unrealistic target journals, poor paper construction, poor research design, lack of novelty, irrelevant clinical research, unrealistic time-frames, improper English, plagiarism--these are some of the many aspects of writing that you must steer clear if you want your manuscript to be selected.

At Pubrica, experienced editors show you the way forward and guide you in this cumbersome process; experts advise you from conceptualizing novel ideas to responding to your reviewers. We are with you till you publish your journal successfully.

How our experts address the reviewer comments ?

- > Carefully gathering thoughts: Browse the comments and carefully gather your thoughts before addressing them. Then take a fresh look at the comments and determine what modifications the reviewers'/editors' want to see in your manuscript.

- > Track changes: Use track changes or different colour to clarify revised text in the manuscript
- > Rebuttal letter: (1) Attach a separate sheet listing response to referee comments (2) Include referee comments in response (3) Respond to individual comments (4) State upfront what action was taken (done /not done) and then explain the reason
- > Address each reviewer's comments separately but on one response note as reviewer A and B's response to any comment. *the reviewer-comment does not include formatting, and resubmission Help
